Ooligan Press Develops Resource Book for Educators

In 2009, Ooligan Press will release a second edition of Laurie King and Dennis Stovall's Classroom Publishing: A Practical Guide to Enhancing Student Literacy. A team of Ooligan students and faculty is writing and developing the book, which will spotlight the innovative publishing practices of teachers around the country.

Classroom Publishing will be packed with ideas and examples ranging from the work of first graders using crayons and scissors to high school students publishing on the Web to college students editing, designing, and marketing books in real markets. Ooligan's book will cover a broad range of projects so publishing can be applied to any classroom, regardless of budget, age group, subject area, or demographic.

When King and Stovall published the first Classroom Publishing in 1992, the book heralded the coming explosion in classroom publishing. The vignettes and practical advice on integrating publishing into all types of classrooms were invaluable resources to educators; however, much has changed in fifteen years. While Stovall established Ooligan Press and the Master's in Publishing program at Portland State University, technology expanded publishing possibilities in classrooms across the country. Since classroom publishing has evolved, it's time to update the book to include current technology and teaching methods.

To find more information about the book or to share classroom publishing stories:
Contact Ooligan Press at ooligan.classroom@pdx.edu
Or visit our blog at ooliganclassroompublishing.blogspot.com.